The Hanover Theatre Repertory to offer
Shakespeare’s Julius Caesar as gift to the community

Worcester, Mass. (February 12, 2021) The Hanover Theater Repertory (THT Rep), a new initiative committed to engaging, entertaining and energizing Worcester audiences with dynamic theatrical events, is proud to partner with the City of Worcester to present William Shakespeare's Julius Caesar. Performances will be offered free and open to the public on the Worcester Common Friday, August 6 through Sunday, August 22, with preview performances starting Tuesday, August 3.

“This production is our gift to the community, a way of saying ‘thank you’ for the extraordinary level of support we’ve been shown throughout the pandemic,” said Troy Siebels, president and CEO of The Hanover Theatre and Conservatory for the Performing Arts. “We are grateful for the opportunity to work with the city to safely bring live theatre back to downtown.”

Shakespeare’s timely tragedy is equal parts political drama and civil war epic, and chronicles the battle for the soul of a republic. Specially adapted and directed by THT Rep’s artistic director, Livy Scanlon, this Julius Caesar will run approximately 90 minutes with intermission and feature immersive, energetic, socially distanced staging. Togas and crowd participation will be encouraged, as audiences will have the opportunity to boo and cheer along with the action. Seating will be available in the Worcester Common Oval on a first-come-first-serve basis, while those who arrive later can bring their own lawn chairs or join the fun from a park bench.

As with past THT Rep productions, COVID-19 safety precautions will be enforced at Julius Caesar and performances will follow state guidelines.

“It is critically important to keep people connected to the arts, and COVID-19 has forced us to reimagine how to do that,” City Manager Edward M. Augustus, Jr. said. “Staging Julius Caesar outside will once again allow audiences to safely enjoy live theatre and stay connected to the city’s vibrant arts scene. We are excited to partner with THT Rep to help bring this production to life.”

THT Rep has a proven track record of following safety protocols at recent performances including Edgar Allan Poe Double Header in October and A Christmas Carol Reimagined in December, both of which were approved by the health and safety teams at Actors’ Equity Association.

In order to hire professional theatre artists, meet all costs and offer performances free and open to the public, THT Rep’s production of Julius Caesar relies on generous underwriting from individual and institutional sponsors, including presenting sponsors Assumption University and BayState Savings Bank.

“Live theatre is incredibly expensive to produce, even more so when it’s staged outside,” explained Scanlon. “Though it may sound like a lot, we’re mounting this Julius Caesar on an incredibly lean budget of only $200,000, which means paying the professionals on the show little more than the minimum wage.”

“We will be seeking to raise the dollars we need in the coming weeks,” Siebels said. “Our generous supporters will enable us to offer these performances to audiences at no cost and to build toward a future where we can support local theatre professionals with the higher wages we need to attract them to stay in Worcester.”
