With supporting act J.B. Ball. (TBC)

Williams' show offers a fresh perspective on life's quirks, cleverly navigating through his experiences as a little person, relationships and everyday situations. His humorous and inspiring observations on disability, relationships, sex and race consistently win over audiences; proving anyone can overcome their shortcomings. His high energy live performances frequently produce standing ovations from audience members, which prompted the late Robin Williams to call him "Prozac with a head."

Williams has parlayed his live performances into numerous stand-up television appearances, including “The Tonight Show,” “Dave Attell’s Comedy Underground” and “Jimmy Kimmel Live.” His first one-hour special, “Fun Size,” was the highest-rated special on Showtime. A year later, he followed that with his second special, “Daddy Issues,” which was even more successful than the first. His third special in three years was an uproarious one, hosting some of the edgiest comedians in the country from the prestigious Montreal Just For Laughs Festival. His last groundbreaking special on Netflix, “The Degenerates,” garnered high ratings and rave reviews. Also an accomplished actor, Williams has appeared on numerous TV shows and feature films, including FX’s “Legit,” “Sam and Cat,” “Mind of Mencia,” “Pitboss,” a recurring role on the Hulu original show “Deadbeat” and memorable roles in movies such as “Little Evil,” produced by Scott Stuber (“Ted”), as well as the Netflix original Christopher Guest film “Mascots” and most recently “Reno 911: It’s a Wonderful Heist.”

According to the New York Times, “No one is doing stand-up comedy more hilariously than, Brad Williams.”
